The last 18 months have been chock-full of sweat and joy as we've worked indefatigably to create a resource we hoped would inspire and resonate with progressive librarians of all ages and at all libraries. Pilgrims that we are, we poured our hearts into this emprise, growing and learning throughout the entire process. But now, even though there's plenty of love left, there's simply not enough time to keep NewBreed Librarian afloat. So, borrowing from Tom, goodnight to the street sweepers, the night watchman flame keepers, and goodnight to NewBreed, too.

But we're not leaving you empty-handed - we've got one more issue of NewBreed Librarian to share with you:

- FEATURE: Corey Harper argues that cataloging is a public service
- INTERVIEW: Eric Miller on the Semantic Web
- PEOPLE: Fiona Bradley, Aussie music librarian
- TECHTALK: What's new and cool in library technology
- ASK SUSU: How do you propose a new subject heading?

We'll keep the web site up for the foreseeable future, and will let you know if/when we decide to move it elsewhere.
