

Ho'olaule'a to celebrate

To create a celebration space, a stage area is placed into the ground in order to use the natural backdrop of Oahu's beaches, while a series of terraced pools provide seating and display opportunities. When the space is not being used for events, it provides a play, water area for the public.

Pā'ina

to share a meal

Embracing the enjoyment of Hawaiian parties and lū'aus, these pavillions provide various sized areas for people to occupy. Simple tent structures are used to allow activity to happen at a moments notice. While the structures are not in use, the space provides a memory of past and future events.

to correct

Due to the rapidly occurring cultural changes in Hawaii, the local Hawaiians have created an event that allows for their needs and concerns to be voiced and heard. This gallery works to provide formal gathering space for the people's culture to be displayed and understood.

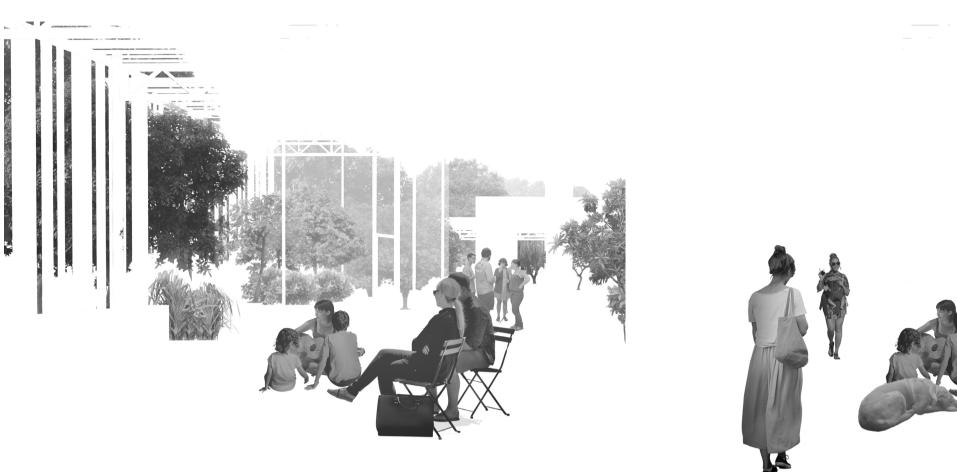

Hunehune

to socialize

Embracing the social, laid back culture, the market provides an opportunity for people to informally meet and gather on an everyday basis. The market showcases the natural produce of Hawaii, while the simple structure creates an enjoyable covered destination.

Kani ka Pila

The garden provides a gradient of intimate and open spaces that allows for the local residents to informally play and gather together. Covered structures provide breaks from the rain, while also incorporating space for experimental horticulture to take place.
