The Measure of a University

“A UNIVERSITY is as good as its faculty, and as strong as its alumni.”

It is comparatively easy to determine how good a university is, according to the above quotation, but how is the strength of the university to be measured?

To answer this query it might be well to make a study of the universities which have strong alumni bodies; to sift them out and find out wherein their strength lay and determine, if possible, how it was developed.

Clearly it is not the size of the alumni body that counts, for Lehigh University has one of the strongest alumni associations in this country, and yet Lehigh University is a comparatively small college. Age is not a determining factor either, for Cornell University, which celebrated its fiftieth anniversary in 1919, is noted for the activity and loyalty of the alumni association. Neither is it the wealth of the graduates of a college that makes it strong, for Agnes Scott college, a small women's institution in the east, whose graduates are women earning moderate incomes, mainly in the teaching profession, recently averaged a $300 gift for each graduate in a recent endowment campaign launched by the college.

One factor in the making of a strong alumni body is unity of purpose or a definite goal toward which the association is working. In the case of Lehigh University it was the depreciation in the value of the stocks of the Lehigh Valley railway and as the endowment money was invested there, the income of the University was cut off.

But Lehigh did not die.

The alumni came to the rescue and raised sufficient funds to tide the college over and as a result of this united effort the Lehigh alumni “found themselves” and since then Lehigh University is proud to measure her strength by the alumni.

Cornell's Early Years Are Hard

The alumni, faculty and students of Cornell University had to stand together in the beginning or lose out in the fight for recognition, for Cornell was not always as popular as it is now. A pioneer in the field of education, because in the curriculum the sciences held an equal footing with the arts, it meant that the small group of faculty people under the leadership of Andrew D. White, the first president, and the student body must be loyal to the new conception. They were loyal and today in nearly all the colleges and universities of the country the sciences hold the same place in the curriculum as the arts. And as a result of her trial, Cornell formed the beginnings of one of the strongest alumni associations in the United States.

The strength of the state university is measured not only by the loyalty of its alumni but by the support the university gets through the votes of the commonwealth. The voting of funds is the expression of the people of the state in the value of higher education.

Ohio State University, according to J. L. Morrill, secretary of the alumni association, found in mobilizing its alumni as zealous publicists and promoters of the idea that state funds and taxpayers' money, invested in higher education, pays real dividends to the state at large and to them as individuals, that legislative appropriations increased and the work united the alumni body.

The generous appropriations by the state legislature of Ohio has not been the only goal of the alumni of Ohio State. They have recently closed a successful million dollar campaign for an endowment fund.

Other state-supported colleges have also conducted successful endowment campaigns. The Michigan Agricultural College has $500,000 as its goal, though during the recent legislative period they received from the state over half of what they asked for.

The University of Kansas is in the midst of a million dollar memorial fund campaign, the money secured to be used to build a new stadium and Kansas Union and to erect a statue of Dean James Woods Green.

More than a million dollars has been subscribed for the soldiers' memorial stadium at California. Six thousand nine hundred and fourteen alumni, faculty, etc., subscribed to this fund and 3,230 belonging to the student class contributed.

In Georgia the state legislature cut the appropriation of the Georgia School of Technology 10 per cent, whereupon the alumni rallied and raised a $1,350,000 endowment fund.

State Universities Conduct Campaigns

The University of Virginia has recently completed a $1,340,000 endowment campaign.

When the subject of how to instill into the alumni of the state universities the feeling of gratitude and obligation seen in the endowed universities, was up for discussion at the convention of associated alumni secretaries, held at Ithaca, N. Y., last May, Carl Stephens, secretary of the Illinois Alumni association, said:

“So far as Illinois is concerned I think our Stadium campaign will do much. Our alumni have never given anything to speak of. As students they paid only $24 a year as regular fees (now raised to $50). The total contribution of our alumni to scholarships, buildings, etc., doesn't much exceed $150,000. If it is true that a good share of a man's heart is where his money is, our stadium campaign should do wonders. We are getting ready to ask our alumni for two millions. The students have already raised $700,000.”

Spirit of Helpfulness Growing

These examples of giving by the alumni of the state universities show that the idea is growing as the alumni come to realize the opportunity of service before them. It is this spirit of loyalty, of obligation and of service that has prompted the alumni of so many of our leading universities and colleges to raise endowment funds at this time. For high costs of maintenance, increased enrollment, with the accompanying demand for new buildings, and the broadening scope of uni-

Deady Hall Forty-four Years Ago

Dean Straub Tells of Those Early Days

By LILLIAN AULD, '22

PROCTOR'S celebrated statue is not the only pioneer on the University of Oregon campus. Dr. John Straub, for 40 years dean of men at the state university, is one of the oldest pioneers of higher education on the Pacific coast. The statue is an heroic bronze, representing an early pioneer on his march westward, and standing arrested by a far-off vision of the future. From his office behind the white columns of the Administration building, Dean Straub looks out upon the splendid realization of that portion of the pioneer's vision to which he has devoted the best 44 years of his life.

Dean Straub arrived in Eugene at 8 p. m., November 17, 1878, and he has been with the University ever since. He will be 69 years old the sixth of next April, and has taught under every president of the University. J. W. Johnson, president, Dr. M. Bailey, Thomas Condon and Dr. Straub constituted the first Oregon faculty. Today Dean Straub is the only person living from among that original faculty or the first board of regents. In an interview he recalled the following experiences at the University of Oregon:

It was raining the night he arrived in Eugene. After dinner at the Old Astor house, a frame building with wide porticoes which occupied the site of the present Smeed hotel, he set out for President Johnson's home to announce his arrival. It was not yet 9 o'clock. On the way up Willamette street he met the lamp lighter, who was blowing out the kerosene street lamps for the night.

President Johnson's house stood on a pitch-dark corner surrounded by a high board fence. Dr. Straub could not find a gate, but he solved that difficulty by climbing the fence. After repeated knockings, accompanied by the barking of three setters, President Johnson announced through a crack in the door that he had retired for the night. He would not receive the new young tutor. It was at 9 the following morning, in the as yet unfinished Deady hall, that Dr. Straub was formally received into the University of Oregon.

Campus Looks Bleak

There were only two small oak trees on the campus in those days. The lone building on top of the hill must have looked very bleak to the tree-loving young man that November morning. At any rate he made several successive appeals to Judge Deady for $200 with which to set out trees. When he presented his last petition in 1881 the old judge's eyes twinkled kindly beneath a frown.

"I see you must have that $200 or be dismissed from the University," he said. The board voted the money and the campus, now famed for its beautiful trees and lawns, began to take shape.

It was several years before a second building followed Deady on the hill. In that time Dean Straub was busy teaching Latin, Greek, German, French, algebra, geometry, rhetoric and higher arithmetic. To cover such a curriculum he was often in the classroom from 7 in the morning until night.

"It took all my time except Sundays," he said, "and I spent that as superintendent of the Presbyterian Sunday school."

There is a story Dean Straub tells of his first week in the University which has never failed to delight all who have heard it.

He was a fastidious young man and it annoyed him exceedingly that the men in his early 7 o'clock classes came into the presence of girls in collarless shirts and muddy shoes. He asked the men to remain after class one morning and suggested that they polish their shoes and don collars and ties the next day. They agreed to do so.

During those early classes each student supplied his own light furnished by a tallow candle held in one hand. The following morning Dr. Straub looked down upon rows of neatly polished boots glistening under the candle light. Alone on the front row sat a chap wearing a high collar which cut his ears and a scarlet tie that out-flamed the candles. His feet were planted seriously in front of him, and a strip of bright red socks flared above shoes which shone with the unmistakable steely blue peculiar only to stove polish.

It was difficult to keep from laughing, and when a drip of hot tallow elicited an agonized "ouch" from one of the students, everybody roared in relief. After class the boy explained. He was earning his way through college, and his "cash in hand" would only cover the price of the old-fashioned collar and hectic tie found on the bargain counter. Stove polish was all he had to brighten up his shoes. Today the young man is one of the most successful lawyers in the state.

Enrollment Is 150

There were only 150 students in the University at first, their ages ranging from 9 to 30 years. Only 40 were in the collegiate school. Soon after his entrance into the faculty Dean Straub was elected secretary. Under his first nickname of "Secy-facy" he conducted "extra sessions" which were the bane of all students who dared to come to his classes unprepared.

Deady was not heated by a furnace then. The wood was stored in the basement and two boys received tuition for carrying it up and stowing it into large box stoves which stood in each room.

"It was sometimes cold at the beginning of an hour," Dean Straub remarked, "but by the time I got through with them it was generally warm enough."

Salaries were very uncertain in the old days, and were paid every three months. A professor's requisition was often returned stamped "no funds." But this was by no means the strangest of the early financial struggles of the little college.

Dean Straub recalled a Saturday night when there would have been no funds to pay the workmen on a new building if a friend had not gone out into the country and solicited donations. The man came home conducting a load of hay, a load of wood, and one meek cow. The donations were sold and the workmen paid.

In that time, before the state had such means of revenue as the present millage bill, money came to the University from almost every source. One woman took in washing one day a week for six weeks and gave every cent she made to the University.

Chicken Thieves Give Aid

Another woman sewed one day a week for six weeks in the same cause. Gifts of 10 and 15 cents were not unusual. The most amusing gift was 35 cents offered Mrs. Ben Dorris by two small boys, who said they had earned it the night before. However, two chickens were missing from the Dorris henhouse, and inquiry at the local butcher shop showed that the two youngsters were the culprits. They had kept only 15 cents for themselves.

Two Pioneers

Dean Straub says: "The University has gone through many doubtful periods, but I have never been worried. I had no fear of the final outcome, for I knew the people of Oregon would never destroy their own state university, and the final outcome has justified my confidence in them."

"Daddy Straub," as he is known to the students of today, is the best loved of any member of the faculty. His title of "guardian angel of the freshman class" is very dear to his heart, for they have been his particular care and interest through all the years. Every Oregon student looks upon him as a personal friend. He knows them all and never fails to call each visiting graduate by name.

In 1900 Dr. Straub was made dean of the college of liberal arts, but resigned in 1920 to give his time more fully to his duties as dean of men. Six years ago he was urged to run for governor but refused, preferring to be known as "the grand old man of Oregon" than governor of the state. Today he is as busy as ever, and teaches from three to five hours daily in addition to his other work. His first car, which he has recently purchased, constitutes his only regular recreation. The happiness of his life in the service of the people of Oregon has only been marred by one great sorrow. This was the death of his only son, Vincent, a brilliant student, like his father.

"My one hope," he said thoughtfully at the end of our interview, "is that I may remain in health and strength so that I may complete 50 years in the University, and that the regents may be as kind and indulgent in the next six years as they have in the past 44."

Preppers Confer on Problems

Lyle Bartholomew

Through the efforts of Lyle Bartholomew, president of the associated students of the University of Oregon, the conference of high school editors and managers held at the University during Junior Week-end has been enlarged to include the student body representatives as well as editors and managers of the high school papers. The inspiration came, according to Mr. Bartholomew, through the efficient and successful operation of the Pacific Association of Student Body Presidents and to the effectiveness of the high school editors' conference in raising the standards of the high school papers and year books.

The present plan makes a place for the representation of the high school girls, whose problems have held an important place in the program of the conference.

The program outlined by the committee in charge includes talks by leading educators of the state. This includes a discussion of "High School Relations and Problems," by J. A. Churchill, state superintendent of public instruction; a talk on student problems by A. C. Strange, city superintendent of the Astoria schools; and helpful hints on student organization by J. C. Nelson, principal of the Salem high school which is known as an example of good student cooperation and government.

"Athletics and Their Relation to Scholarship" was the topic of the talk by C. A. Howard, president of the Parent-Teachers' association and city superintendent of public schools at Marshfield; Dean H. D. Sheldon of the school of education discussed "High School Clubs" and Professor H. R. Douglass of the school of education spoke about "Student Body Finances."

THE University of Oregon sponsored for the first time April 14-15 a conference on the campus of student body presidents, secretaries, editors of year books and papers, and representative students of the leading high schools of the state.

The idea of bringing this group of high school leaders together was to give the valuable information concerning student body organization and its problems, technical knowledge on how to run a high school paper and additional inspiration for a higher education.

For the entertainment of their guests the student committee, assisted by the Oregon Knights, conducted a tour through the campus, and the Associated Students had them as guests for the all-state relay meet held on Hayward field. Friday evening the visitors had the privilege of witnessing a real college pep fest, when the University students who had earned their letters in the various activities were given their awards at the college-night celebration held in the Woman's building.

The conference formed a permanent organization. Officers were elected with the purpose of carrying on the work begun by the conference.

The Second Generation

THIRTY-THREE students now attending the University belong to the second generation of Oregon students, according to data available at the office of the alumni secretary. The University is proud to acknowledge the sons and daughters of former Oregon students and hopes to add from time to time to the list of names of others as the records are made more complete. The list as it now stands includes:

Track

The outlook for track is not especially good this season. Although there is a large number of candidates out for the varsity, men of the ability to win firsts in fast meets are sadly lacking. However, Coach "Bill" Hayward is sitting up nights trying to figure out a combination that will drag down enough points to throw a scare into some of the opposing teams. "Bill's" headwork has won more than one meet in the past and what has been done before can be done again.

The lettermen who are out this year are Wyatt and Sundleaf in the quarter-mile; Peltier and Wyatt in the half; Walkley, mile; Blackburn, two-mile; Larson, sprints; Strachan, weights; Kuhnhausen, hurdles; Phillips, pole vault; Bowles, broad jump and high jump. Other likely candidates are Webber in the hurdles and high jump, Spearow in the pole vault and the high and broad jumps, Lucas in the hurdles and 440, Oberteuffer and Jensen in the sprints, McCraw, Von der Ahe and Gram in the weights, Ingle in the pole vault and javelin, Koepf and Byers in the two-mile, Beattie, Campbell and McCune in the half-mile, and Risley, Rosebraugh, Covalt and Dunsmore in the 440.

The cinder track on Hayward field is in good shape this spring and although cold and wet weather formed a handicap to early season training, the men have slowly been rounding into shape under the tutelage of Hayward and of "Hank" Foster, former varsity star and now assistant track coach, who has special charge of the frosh.

The varsity season opens with the Oregon State Relay meet at Eugene, April 14 and 15, when practically every college in the state will send a team to the University. The Oregon varsity will compete only with the O. A. C. varsity in this meet, as the competition is limited between certain classifications of schools. The complete track schedule to date is as follows:

- April 14-15—State Relay Meet, Eugene.
- April 29—Seattle Relay Meet.
- May 13—O. A. C. Dual Meet, Corvallis. Frosh-Chemawa Meet, Eugene,
- May 19—Frosh-Rook Meet, Eugene (Junior Week-end).
- May 20—University of Washington Dual Meet, Eugene.
- May 27—Pacific Coast and Northwest Conference Meet, Seattle.

Baseball

With only three varsity lettermen eligible at the beginning of the season, none of them a pitcher, Coach George Bohler faces the problem of developing practically an entire new baseball team this year. "Spike" Leslie, the only two-year letterman, is on hand to work behind the home plate again and Beller at second base and Zimmerman in left field are the other two eligibles.

At first base it looks as though it will be a fight between "Hunk" Latham, football and basketball star, and Terry Johnson, a member of last year's freshman nine. Collins, Moore and Ross are three probable candidates from which the short-stop and third baseman will be picked. Svarverud, a letterman at third last year, is back but academic difficulties make his eligibility doubtful. Ward Johnson and Johnny Watson are trying to beat "Spike" out of his catcher's berth. In the outfield the right and center field positions will fall to Geary, Sorsby, Couch or Fargher, with several other men showing up to good advantage.

The pitching staff looks weakest as there are no veterans for the mound this year. Rollo Gray is the only one who has had any considerable experience on the varsity from last year. Hewitt, from the varsity squad of last year, is also on hand and from the freshman team of 1921 Baldwin, Wright and Ringle are showing some pretty good stuff.

Pacific University will furnish the first opposition to the varsity in a two-game series, April 14 and 15. The rest of the schedule is as follows:

- April 21-22—University of Washington, Seattle.
- April 24-25—Washington State College, Pullman.
- April 26-27—Idaho, Moscow.
- April 28-29—Whitman, Walla Walla.
- May 5-6—Washington State College, Eugene.
- May 8-9—University of Washington, Eugene.
- May 12-13—O. A. C., Corvallis.
- May 17-18—Whitman, Eugene.
- May 19-20—O. A. C., Eugene.

Tennis

Oregon will participate in the Pacific Coast Conference tennis meet at Berkeley on May 11, 12 and 13. A two-man team will be sent to the south to represent the University. Kenneth Smith is the only letterman in this sport now in school and he will form the nucleus of the varsity squad. Some promising material has been showing up on the courts and a strong team should be developed, although the California teams will undoubtedly have the edge on all others on account of the better weather they enjoy for the sport.

Meets are also planned with Willamette, Reed and O. A. C. The O. A. C. meet will be held in Eugene at the time of Junior Week-end, May 19-20. Dr. D. E. Lancefield of the zoology department is coaching the tennis team this year.

Spring Football To Start

Spring football practice will begin this week and continue through most of the term, according to "Shy" Huntington, varsity coach. Kicking, passing and formation work will constitute most of the preliminary training. Last year Huntington became convinced of the value of the spring workouts, especially for men who had been on the freshman team in the fall, and he intends to keep it up.

Ten Basketball Letters Awarded

Letters in basketball have been awarded to ten players on the 1922 varsity. They are Latham, Rockhey, Edlund, Andre and Alstock, forwards; Zimmerman, center; and Beller, Burnett, Couch and Goar, guards. Beller and Latham are each three-year men and the others made their letter for the first time this year.

Needed, Not Ultimately, But Now--

With full recognition of the fact that funds are not available for the construction of new buildings on the campus, every influence should be brought to bear upon the controlling factors in the University's building program to include a suitable auditorium at the earliest possible moment. The need for such a building here is only too obvious when the seating capacity of Villard hall is utilized to the limit and still there are many students who are unable to get in.

Although it is true that the maximum attendance is not always procured at an assembly hour, it is nevertheless also certain that this attendance could come more nearly reaching the maximum if a more attractive accommodation for the comfort of the students during the hour could be arranged. The abominable benches and folding chairs which must needs be used by the students who attend assemblies are a disgrace to the institution.

The bare walls of the ugliest hue and a stage void of any semblance of attempted decoration for any occasion, no matter what it may be, surely do not tend to add any warmth to assist the speaker in creating a receptive atmosphere on the part of his listeners. Perhaps this may account for the flat failure of many of the lectures recently delivered from the stage in Villard to assembly crowds.

The regular weekly assemblies at Oregon have occasioned the highest praise from campus visitors, and they have often attributed the friendly democracy which exists here to this period of gathering together when many are thrown outside of their own group and make the best of the opportunity to associate with fellow students of other groups. Then there is a further element in developing democracy and loyalty to the institution which is created by the effect of a thousand or more voices singing "Mighty Oregon."

Vesper services, another opportunity for University students to come into closer contact with one another, have been discontinued on the campus and are now held in the churches of Eugene, where better facilities are available; the use of a pipe organ is essential to the best results in a musical program of this nature.

But failing to obtain the new auditorium for which there is a crying need, is it not possible for an improvement in the present barnlike surroundings which are plainly unpleasant to both the speaker and the audience? A little interior decorating, perhaps a few coats of paint and varnish, the selection of a few paintings which will enliven the present drab effect, and the installation of a pipe organ and comfortable theatre chairs have all been suggested.

—Oregon Daily Emerald.

A Club for Everyone

A few years ago—a very few—intellectual activity on the campus was confined to the classroom and to a very few organizations, mostly of a literary nature. The contrast afforded by the present situation in that respect is striking. There are clubs for those who are interested in philosophy, others in sociology, in home economics, in French, in Spanish, in music, in law, in medicine, in chemistry, in botany, in education, in journalism, in commerce, in psychology, in the drama, in fiction, in other forms of writing, in public speaking, in architecture, in fine arts, and even in other lines of thought and activity.

What does this all mean? Is it progress? Is it a widening of interest, a deepening of thought along these special lines? Is it a desire to go beyond the narrow limits of the classroom in developing an interest in the various specialties that combine with the cultural fundamentals to make up a complete university? Or is this all just so much added to the demand on a student's already well-filled time, without a corresponding benefit derived to pay for the thought and energy expended. The answer will depend on the personnel of the organizations. The answer cannot help but be hopeful. Students are not going to give up their time, for long, to organizations that do not yield an intellectual or a social return. Interest in most of these organizations appears to be growing, and the reason for this can be found in the fact that the program makers are putting forth a real effort to obtain for the student something so stimulating that the meetings will be regarded as vital aids to education.

Most of the students who leave college in June for the summer vacation want a job for the summer season. To many it will mean an additional year in college.

Why not, alumni, line up the available jobs in your home town and have them ready for the students who return? Or, better yet, send in a list of the places where summer work may be secured to the alumni office and we will connect the student with his job before he leaves Eugene.

The editor of this issue wishes to thank the alumni and former students of the school of journalism for their hearty response to a request for news of the alumni. Some of them, though not in newspaper work now, gladly took up the pad and pencil again for the sake of "Old Oregon." If our "News of the Classes" department is a bit bigger and better you may know it is due to their efforts and to the response of a few alumni to the pink sheet sent out in the January issue.

Gift of Books Received

A recent gift of 25 volumes of history and literature was recently made to the University library by Mr. and Mrs. Daniel W. Briggs, of Portland. The library has also secured from the library of the late Rev. J. H. Boyd, formerly of Portland, 44 volumes from a collection on the negro. Included in the collection are works on the anthropological, historical, and sociological phases of the negro question.

ALUMNI CLUBS

Yamhill County

By LAMAR TOOZE, '16

THE Yamhill County University of Oregon Alumni Association is the long name that represents the recently-formed organization of ex-students of the University living in Yamhill County.

Taking advantage of the presence of President P. L. Campbell in McMinnville, March 7, for the purpose of making addresses to the Linfield College and McMinnville high school student bodies, former students gathered from all parts of the county at a banquet in President Campbell's honor at the Elberton hotel. Thirty-nine surrounded the T-shaped festive board, 30 of whom had attended the University.

President Campbell, in an address which several old grads characterized as the best they had ever heard him deliver, told of the development of the University from a little college to one of the ranking institutions of the country. He explained how the growth of the college had out-run the increase in the taxable property valuations in the state and that the time had come, if the University is to grow and if it is to be freely open to all high school graduates of the state who knock at its doors for admittance, when it has become necessary to seek private gifts to support the institution. He told of the gift of the Rockefeller Foundation to the Medical School and of the gift of the Warner collection. The reaction among local alumni has been favorable. There is considerable talk of starting a movement among the alumni in this county to raise funds for the maintenance of the institution. One method suggested is that each former student give the University his note representing tuition. For example, tuition would be computed at the rate of $50 a year and if a student attended the University one year he would pay $50; two years, $100, and so on.

Lamar Tooze, '16, was elected president of the new organization and William Martin Jr., ex-'23, was chosen secretary-treasurer. An effort will be made to enlist all former U. of O. people in the county as members. It is requested that ex-students, not named below, send in their names and addresses to Mr. Martin whose address is McMinnville. There are no dues and it is planned to hold banquets and parties during the year.

Following are the University people who attended the banquet:

President P. L. Campbell; Grady's Harbke, '20, of Portland; Louise M. Shahan, ex-'22, Ocean Falls, B. C.; Callie Beck Heider, '15, and Otto W. Heider, '14, of Sheridan; Clarence Lombard, '20, of Eugene; Omar N. Bittner, '07; Harper N. Jamison, '10; George F. Jameson, ex-'23; Marion Barnum, ex-'24; Hazel Radagaugh, '18; Beatrice Gredswan, ex-'24; Alice Hamm, ex-'22; Earl A. Nott, '10; Clyde N. Compton, ex-'22; Irl McSherry, ex-'24; Marie B. . . .
Astoria

The Astoria Alumni made the visit of President P. L. Campbell the occasion for a get-together dinner, Tuesday evening, March 21, when the honor guest explained to the company the financial status of the state university.

The president pointed out how the income from the millage tax, used with the strictest economy, is only sufficient to provide for the maintenance of the institution and to leave a small balance each year for the construction of necessary new buildings, but that he was opposed to asking the state for additional appropriations.

At the meeting the alumni association unanimously passed a resolution presented by C. W. Robinson, denying that state institutions turn out "socialists," but do create a high type of citizenship, and that they would strongly oppose any effort to reduce or repeal the state millage tax for the support of higher educational institutions.

DeWitt Gilbert, '19, president of the Astoria association appointed C. W. Robinson, Mrs. John Canon, ex-'07, Russell Fox, ex-'19, Miss Lillian Littler, ex-'19, and Virgil Earl, '06, as a committee to undertake the formation of a University club in Astoria.

Glee Club Trip Successful

MEMBERS of the Men's Glee Club returned to the campus from their trip to southern Oregon during vacation with glowing reports of the wonderful welcome and support that the alumni gave them, and which they declared was in a large measure responsible for both the financial and the artistic success of the trip.

Dances were given at Medford, Ashland, Roseburg and Oakland, which provided good times for the men and assisted somewhat in the finances.

Leaving Eugene on Tuesday of vacation week, the club went to Cottage Grove where they were entertained at a banquet given by the students of the high school and alumni of the University. Harry "Skinny" Hargraves, principal of the Cottage Grove high school and enthusiastic Oregon alumnus, was in charge of the entertainment.

"Laurie" Gray and Vernon Vawter were the ex-Oregon students who did much to aid the success of the club in Medford.

In Ashland John Finneran worked with the American Legion in arranging one of the best concerts of the trip.

Roseburg proved one of the most enthusiastic towns visited and the concert was especially well attended. Much credit is due to the active students of the University for their work in arranging for a visit of the glee club.

Every member of the club as well as the director and manager were delighted at the success of the trip. Maurice Eben, president of the organization, and for three years a member, said: "It was the most pleasant and the best conducted trip we have had."

According to John Stark Evans, director, the trip was successful from an artistic standpoint as well. "There was no let down in the quality of work, the men held up to their usual high standard throughout," said Mr. Evans.

Jack Benefiel, graduate manager of the University, said: "It was the best trip in years, not only because about $100 was cleared, but from every other standpoint."

Former Instructor Visits Campus

George O'Donnell, instructor in German in the University from 1914 to 1916, made a short visit to the campus the last week in March. Mr. O'Donnell is now teaching in a private boys' school in New Haven, Conn., the main function of which is to prepare boys for Yale. Mr. O'Donnell was called west on business and while on the coast again after an absence of several years visited the Universities of Washington, Oregon and Idaho, having had scholastic connections with all three.

Tre Nu, an honor organization of college women who are wholly or partially self-supporting, has started a student loan fund. This money will be available in small sums to girls who need a loan for a short time. It is named in honor of Miss Tirza Dinsdale, former Y. W. C. A. secretary.

Newton Is Vice-Consul

Harold ("Skinny") Newton, '19, has recently been appointed American vice-consul in Kobe, Japan, according to a letter received by Dean Eric Allen of the school of journalism which was published in the Oregon Emerald, which says of him:

"'Skinny,' whose appointment to the important post of vice-consul at the largest port on the Pacific comes to him in his twenty-fifth year, has had steady advancement since he went to Japan after his graduation less than three years ago. At first he served as instructor in English in a Japanese college in Osaka and next was appointed to the staff of the Taisho Nichi Nichi Shimbun, a metropolitan newspaper printed entirely in Japanese at Osaka.

"Newton, who came to the University from La Grande, has always had a love for travel. In 1917-18 he served on a vessel of the United States shipping board, which took him to the orient and other far parts of the earth. Returning, he took his diploma in journalism and was on his way again. This time the call of the orient drew him to Japan. He is a member of Delta Tau Delta and Sigma Delta Chi."

His letter to his former dean follows:

"I have addressed you by your first name because I am no longer an undergraduate, and I see no reason why a fellow cannot be somewhat intimate with his major professor after he has gone into the world, and as there is a good stretch of water between us, I fear no verbal calling down.

"Upon my return to these shores from Siberia, where I was sent as a courier for the government, I called at Yokohama. Although I have not time to see your sister, I believe you stated that she was in the Y. W. C. A. and worked there. I made inquiries at the Y. W. C. A. and was told that Miss Allen was on the other side of the city at the time.

"Vladivostok is in a worse mess than ever before. The Russians look H. H. H.—hopeless, helpless and hungry, and I can think also of another H—they looked like. The cut-throats in charge at Moscow are the cause of such misery, a word written across the face of every inhabitant except certain classes.

"Speaking of being definite reminds me that, owing to my journalism training to 'boil down' statements and not 'gush,' I have been too abrupt in some of the official correspondence I am obliged to write, which habit has caused me to be called on the carpet; not that I gave incorrect information, or failed to be authentic, but that I did not string out the sentences somewhat. However, the training your classes gave me in accuracy, and how to stand up and talk to a person, has been a blessing.

"I know that you will be pleased to hear that I have been appointed a vice-consul. My commission was signed on November 18 of last year. No glory, plain work, brought it about. I will probably serve at this port for some time to come. Do you know that Kobe is the largest port on the Pacific in amount of tonnage of vessels entering and clearing, and that it is larger than any in America, New York not included? I am in charge of shipping at present. Busy, but interesting times.

"It pleased me to hear of your trip to Florida last year. Another crown in the star of advertisement for the University.

"Tomorrow the Consulate is closed on account of the state funeral for Yamagata. Although somewhat unpopular with the masses and often a thorn in the side of the governing body, Yamagata was the power behind the throne, and the old gentleman when a young man began carrying out his militaristic ideas; thus today Japan is a world power. It is strange that this country should lose three of her greatest statesmen within a period of three months. Okuma died in January, and Hara, truly a great loss to Japan, in fact to the world, for he was extremely broad-minded, was murdered during last November. I passed through the wicket where he was way-layed at the railway station in Tokyo shortly after the horrible deed was committed by a youth of the said 'modern type.'

"Mr. Brodie, of Oregon City, and I met each other at the same party and had a pleasant conversation. I believe it was Christmas evening. Anyhow Mr. Brodie was passing through Kobe at the time on his way to Siam to become our new minister there. I hope the climate down there doesn't get him.

"Sincerely, "SKINNY' NEWTON, '19."

40 Kirkland St., Cambridge, Mass., Dec. 8, 1921.—I am looking forward eagerly to my return to Oregon next summer and hope to be on the campus by commencement if my work here will permit. The last issue of OLD OREGON was very interesting. I am sure that all alumni will agree with Dean Allen that "mere numbers" does not go a long way in making the right kind of a university; and especially those who are going on to professional schools will strongly endorse the raising of standards and prescribing of courses.

The number of Oregon graduates coming to Boston for graduate work was greatly increased this year. Joe Bell, '17; "Tubby" Ogle, '16, and Ned Fowler, '19, all entered the third year of Harvard Medical this year. Eyler Brown, '16, and Earl Heitschmidt, '19, are now in Tech. Mary Chambers, '17, is now taking graduate work in Biology in Radcliffe. Besides myself, Stephen Matthieu, '19, is the only Oregon graduate in the Law School.

My brother, Anthony, who finished the Harvard Business School last year, is now working for Price, Waterhouse & Co., Accountants. He is hoping to be transferred to their Portland branch in a year or two.

I am planning on taking the Oregon bar exam. next July. I am going to try to get a job with some Portland law firm for the next year, but have no definite prospects in view just now.

Marshall Writes Prize Story

AGAIN Edison Marshall, for two years a student of the University of Oregon, has been honored for his work in the literary field. The Society of Arts and Sciences of New York, in awarding, in memory of O. Henry, the annual prize of $500 for the best short story published by an American in this country, chose Marshall's "The Heart of Little Shikara."

The story was first published in Everybody's Magazine in January, 1921. Later it was printed in Current Opinion and following the announcement of it being the prize story of the year 1921 it appeared in the Oregonian.

"The Heart of Little Shikara" is the story of a little Hindu lad who seemed to belong to the jungle. His hero was the English sahib whom he eagerly looked for when the sahib returned from a hunt in the jungle, for he was a famous tiger hunter. Little Shikara's ambition in life is to be allowed to go hunting with the Englishman and in this tale of adventure, little Shikara gets his wish and also kills a notorious man-eating tigress, thus saving the life of his hero.

Much of the interest and enjoyment of the story lies in the quick action of the story and in the realistic descriptions of the life of the village folk who live at the edge of the jungle.

Marshall is one of the charter members of Ye Tabard Inn, the local chapter of Sigma Upsilon, national writers' fraternity. Each year he offers a prize for the best short story written on the campus of the University.

Kincaid Grandstand Going Down

The historic old grandstand on Kincaid field is gradually being taken down, only enough of it now being left to house a batting cage for the baseball men. In another year the once famous old athletic field will be clean of the old structures and in a few more years it will be covered with new buildings, as the University is now expanding in that direction.

The management of the Osburn Hotel in Eugene has taken out a permit to erect a new apartment house north of the hotel. It is estimated that the cost of the new structure will be about $70,000.

"Shy" Huntington, coach of the football team is not enthusiastic over the new rule adopted by the rules committee in New York. He says that placing the ball in scrimmage will tend to delay the game as the players will have to be lined up, and it is likely that most teams will only try for a place kick from scrimmage anyway.

The Associated Students now have an office in the administration building, where anyone having business with the Student Body may go. The establishment of the office is expected to greatly centralize the work of the various student committees.

iversity work have stretched the resources of the colleges to the breaking point.

Giving of itself, however, is not an end if the alumni association is to be a strong organization. It is only a means to an end.

A. D. Butterfield, of the Worcester Polytechnic Institute, in his paper on "Some Results of Alumni Giving," presented at the convention in Ithaca, pointed out that it has certain definite reactions on the giver, the alumni body and on the community.

The giver, he said, changes his point of view to that of the business man making an investment. He wants to know how his investment is making out. He comes back for special occasions, commencements, and is transformed into a loyal enthusiastic booster for his alma mater. This enthusiasm is transferred to his family and gifts in memory of a father, a son or daughter always touch the heart. Another reaction, he said, is the individual interest taken in the matter of giving suggestions as to what the institution needs.

"The successful reaction will make for a united body of alumni," Mr. Butterfield said. "Organized and ready for work, eager to do its part, such a body is the strongest asset the institution can have."

Alumni giving has a favorable reaction on the community, Mr. Butterfield pointed out, for it brings the institution in the public eye and it receives help sometimes when it is least expected.

"To get other people to support the institution, you must support it yourself, or to put it in another way, if you don't support your own institution, how can you expect others to?" he concluded.

NOW there are many millions of men and women who have learned that a properly safeguarded Bond represents—

- (1) A lien on property and earning power.
- (2) A source of regular income to the owner.

- (4) A sane and easy way to put money to work at a profit.

An Appreciation

My mind can see the bluest sky,
 Horizon-fringed by fir and pine
 On lines of hills, of these some high
 Enough to boast a rough snow-line
 That battles with the summer sun—
 A spot in Southern Oregon.

In spring this blessed land is hued
 With all the shades from Nature's store;
 Sweet orchard blooms and fields renewed
 Mark out the fertile valley's floor.
 Sing mountain woods, "The year's begun
 In sunny Southern Oregon."

In summer time and autumn days
 Our valley harvests for the world.
 And later still, puts on displays
 Of gold and flame-red foliage curled—
 A gorgeous sign of service done
 To all mankind by Oregon.

I sometimes think I like it best
 When thin pink tints of amethyst,—
 As winter brings the year to rest,—
 From sunset rays in filmy mist,
 Compel old hoary peaks to don
 These "Good-night" hues of Oregon.

My work frequently took me into Mexico, but, though often in bandit-infested districts, I was never molested in any way. I believe Mexico is anxious to have American capital come in and develop her mines and there are undoubtedly great opportunities for the mining geologist and engineer in that country. Financial Manhood

"Every month our bank sends back over 300 checks written by young people who have not sufficient funds deposited to meet the payments."

This statement was made by an officer in one of the Eugene banks. It indicates that a startling per cent of young men and women are in a state of financial babyhood -- that they do not even understand the fundamental principles of a checking account!

It is to the members of the Alumni Association who are establishing homes of their own that this advertisement is addressed. Begin the financial education of your children as soon as they can talk. Give them an allowance—even though it is only a penny or two a week to begin with—and make the allowance dependent on some regular task. Insist on a weekly account of expenditures, in order to help them know the value of money.

In other words, teach principles of banking to them at home. Then you will know, when the youngsters pack their trunks for the University of Oregon, that in addition to good characters, and well built bodies you are sending them forth equipped to handle the "money problems" of their University course with the wisdom which comes with real Financial Manhood.
